Gever's work has shown that through play, risk-taking, and solving real problems, children develop responsibility, persistence, and resilience. In this unique, participatory workshop, parents will collaboratively design, build, and problem-solve a project using tools and materials. While the project is a surprise, participants can count on learning new skills, making mistakes, and coming away with concrete strategies to give children hands-on learning experiences which strengthen their innate curiosity and desire to learn.

GEVER TULLEY, is a TED speaker, founder of Tinkering School and Brightworks in San Francisco, and author of Fifty Dangerous Things (You Should Let Your Children Do), and Dangerism! Why We Worry About the Wrong Things and What It's Doing to Our Kids. For more information, visit gevertulley.com.
